There's a Transsexual XXY woman on TikTok who maintains she's an Intersex and XXY advocate, and claims to belong to The400Society. Well I have a major problem with her claims and I left her this comment on her YouTube channel:

"I have been following your videos for some time now and calling me intersex when there's nothing inter about my sex. I was born 50% with 2 testes, raised male because I am male. (good choice for my parents), I had normal start of puberty and normal growth of my testes for ohh at least 3 years! Then more cm'ed the blood stream and the testes failed to respond as they had been doing. Then at around 15 they stopped growing and by 17 they had atrophied, shrunk! And according to my reading, this is a very common response in XXY males.

Your story is unbelievable, which is why I don't believe you. And you have a major problem with accuracy. What you claim is so rare, I have not found a report of it in literature, and I'm thinking you must have a report, a medical report, as that's how rare your claims are. And rare claims like yours get noticed by the medical profession, and they write reports about cases like yours, or more precisely what you claim. There has to be a ream of reports about your very unique claims, and I'm surprised you haven't referred to them."

How do you know she's transsexual and not just an XXY woman? 😂

Candice Cody She says she's in her/her friend. She says she wants to be just like you, you're her hero.

Imagine this, she's only 46, born in modern USA, played football, how did she play football with nothing in her scrotum? How did she con the Coaches to let her join a team of butch bully male players, with her supposedly ambiguous genitalia and no testosterone? Well she'd have no testosterone if her story was true. How did she get the physical strength to play the game?

How did her parents and doctors not notice there was nothing in her scrotum until she was 17? Do you really think all parents and doctors are totally incompetent? Not noticing atrophied testes in adolescence is hardly the same thing as not noticing absent testes as an infant.

And it's probably a typo, she spells your name wrong. 😂

Candice Cody There is no such person as "just an XXY woman" they're almost as rare as twins teeth! I know of 3 in literature. 1 has an absent SRY gene the other 2 have SRY positive gene, so it is postulated that there are other genes besides those on the Y that also determine sex.

Candice Cody And there that other Australian guy, oh what's his name, who claims after a fashion, that he was born with 2 ovaries and 2 testes! He was the reason the NZOA as it was, bolted membership overnight! His claims were ridiculed here and lots of people were shocked. The parents didn't want his testes, so let them sons.

Did you know there are almost forty different representations of XXY, so who's to say 'that Australian guy' did not have the experience you mentioned? Leaving that aside I am a confidant for a parent in the ACT whose XXY child was operated on to 'correct' ambiguous genitalia, part of which involved the presence of one ovary.

No parent wants their child to be different, especially when they are told all that's required to correct their sex development is life long exogenous T at an appropriate age. While reality, on the other hand, says we are not all the same, and that representation of XXY deviates considerably amongst us.

While it would be nice to believe the parents who joined your group en masse were atypical, my experience from dealing with them over the years says otherwise. There is indeed a heightened level of fear, almost bordering on hatred for those who cannot adhere to standardized treatments of care.

Hatred is exacerbated when those with the ability to speak of that experience do so in a manner where it attracts broader attention or in instances where the material might be considered a focal point for researchers. If I may be so bold as to say, as a parent, albeit a non-XXY one, you harbour a similar despite, which in itself might further explain why those parents were drawn to your group. 🤔 I'm not prescriptive to hate other representations; however, it does not mean it is correct.

Try and take a leaf out of my book, and live and let live, because life is too short not too.

When was the last time you looked inside a Hens mouth 😂 I am an XXY woman (non-transsexual) and officially recognised as such in my birth country as well as in Australia.

Candice Cody Big post, I'll be breaking this one down piecemeal, hope you don't mind!

'so what's to say 'that Australian guy' did not have the experience you mentioned?'

Medical literature. Nobody has ever been recorded as having 2 complete sets of opposite functioning gonads, which is what he claimed. And when I could remember his name, I asked him for verification and he claimed he'd feel like being a performing seal, to which I said, 'start performing'

I know the person you are referring to, though I will not mention his name here. Another person you antagonised for similar reasons was Michael Noble (RIP) and where did that get anyone 😂 My point is Graeme, we are all entitled to our own representation of how we view ourselves and I have long respected yours, is it too much to ask that you do the same onto others?

Candice Cody Secondly, no quotes required, this is not about hate, this is about truth and accuracy.

When I was a child at school, I was constantly in trouble for not being accurate. Then, when I became adult, suddenly being accurate flew out the window, for some. But now the mindset is set, like my son, no going back, if anybody wants to make a claim they must back it up with accuracy.

I do not consider how your truth might not be the same as someone else's? I notice your references to all things XXY/Klinefelter's hinge heavily on Albright, Klinefelter et al, but what about the decades before then before Klinefelter's was minted, do you think we all mysteriously appeared on this earth post Klinefelter Syndrome 😂

Candice Cody This is interesting: "While it would be nice to believe the parents who joined your group en masse were atypical, my experience from dealing with them over the years says otherwise. There is indeed a heightened level of fear, almost bordering on hatred for those who cannot adhere to standardized treatments of care."

BTW my grammar and spell checker tells me all the errors you made. 😂 When I'm quoting, that function should be turned off, IMO.

What pissed me off about parents, when I wasn't one, was that they would constantly try to get me to pass on information about other people that I was not legally allowed to share. I hate it when I literally can't talk, I would be breaking the law.

So this is your impression of how parents in NZ responded to the XXY guy in Australia who initially claimed to be born with ovaries, then later extended that claim to testes and ovaries. He was representing himself and every other XXY as being a true hermaphrodite. And the parents here were worried about the safety of their sons, how they'd already shared his schools, and who those needed to know, of their sons then thought to be KS diagnosis. I can understand that fear.

I'm told these days many XXY men that they experience stigma from the general public when their KS diagnosis is revealed. Not something I notice. Imagine how much worse it would be for them if some nut had maintained they were all true hermaphrodites, with the utter confusion the world has about what "True Hermaphrodite" means?

True Hermaphrodite is old school and not used in these modern times and even if it were it would be rare if it applied to 47XXY, I know you are well versed in terminology as they apply to our community, just as I know you are not a fan of TS you are equally not a fan of Intersex, so I won't go there. Like you, I know nothing of the stigma related to disclosure of KS, albeit for different reasons? Mine is that I do not have KS.

Candice Cody "True Hermaphrodite is old school and not used in these modern times and even if it were it would be rare if it applied to 47XXY."

Well it's very interesting that you say that, as the definition of "True Hermaphrodite" is the same as "Ovotesticular DSD" which is "Ovarian and testicular tissue in the same or opposite gonads" So the definition didn't change, just the words used to describe it.

And it just so happens that Jukegh claims to have (or had) ovarian and testicular tissue in opposite gonads. She is claiming to be a true hermaphrodite, even thought she probably doesn't realise it. 😂 And there is no other way around her claims, except to withdraw them, or prove them!

Now the intersex crowd, some do, and some do not like, the old terms. The DSNA, now defunct, its' newsletter was titled "Hermaphrodites with Attitude" 😂 And that is the society David Stocken, XXY man/USA went to, to get XXY included in their definition. And he didn't tell a version of the truth I'm aware of.

Candice Cody Milton Diamond PhD is also the person who helped that Canadian guy, gawd my memory is shocking,...what was his name? The guy who had his penis burned off in a circumcision accident, who was raised as a female, but he rejected the assignment and reassigned himself male. Who committed suicide and his twin brother later, went the same way. So Milton Diamond is not all bad, he is just not all good either! Then he wrote a paper on an XXY female with AIS, you must be able to remember that? He refers to everybody who is XXY to be having KS, ie that's how he was trained."

Candice Cody "....Klinefelter's was merited, do you think we all mysteriously appeared on this earth post Klinefelter Syndrome"

I deal with that very matter in one of my most recent videos. Because I think about these things. How do the 9 men Klinefelter et al studied the notes of, get to Albrights' hypogonadism clinic? I propose that the doctors who detected them are probably lost to history. The doctors Albright worked with could just have easily been Dr Smith and Dr Jones, and we'd be known as suffering from "Smith & Jones Syndrome" 😂

Why is this even important? The names of the doctors who first described a disease, so what? Prior to 1960 diseases were named after the doctor who first described them. That's not like our disease came under some special nomenclature rules!

Are you suggesting we, the whole wide world, should go back to the dark ages days when superstition and religion determined who lived? In the bible there is no mention of an infertile man, all the childless people were females and referred to as "barren" infertility was their fault.

With between 1:500 to 1:1000 males being XXY there's a damn good chance if the bible was an accurate historical record that many of those "barren" females had infertile husbands, and some of them, would have been XXY.

I believe non-disjunction has been an issue for humans and other animals since the beginning of life. Just because they're not recorded in history, does not mean they did not exist.

You asked "How did the 9 men Klinefelter et al studied the notes of, get to Albright's' hypogonadism clinic"

The answer is in the first paragraph of the below-mentioned paper. I believe you have a copy in your possession, indeed I believe you have two of them 😂

Syndrome Characterized by Gynecomastia,
Aspermatogenesis without A-Leydigism, and Increased
Excretion of Follicle- Stimulating Hormone
Fuller Albright, Harry Klinefelter, Edward Reifenstein

Personally, I don't have any grievance with the name of the syndrome or for that matter any syndrome, my grievance is how doctors use it as a blanket description beginning from the age of birth, and then there's the question as to why it needs to be classified as a syndrome at all. Case in point, KS describes a disease of the testes but 47XXY is so much more than just that which in itself explains why doctors know so little about our anatomy.

I'm not a bible person, hence anything you mention from it is completely lost on me.

Representations of XXY are seen in all forms of life and are as diverse as the day is long, it's only us humans who see it as an abnormality, something in need of fixing.

Candice Cody Well since XXY causes growth delays in infancy, learning difficulties in all of life, developmental problems in adolescence, and infertility, it IS something that needs fixing. That you chose not to be fixed is your choice. I chose to be fixed, in fact I initiated the process. My problem with the medical profession is they just don't do their damn job properly!

Candice Cody I spoke to you on the phone, you rang me up, you didn't sound like a woman. You wanted to talk about ADJHD medication. I was living in Edgewave Rd, Palmerston North. Are you saying that wasn't you? I thought I was being tricked, set up, that the conversation was being recorded, not by me. Wherever I am, Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, in person, I don't tell other people what medication they should take, I tell other people what medication I take. So, did someone impersonate you?

Candice Cody Michael Noble, that name rings a bell, I argued with him that XXY and KS were not the same thing, and he asserted that his degree in languages, was it, gave him superior knowledge and I should just sit back and let him do all the thinking and talking and I can shut up. Or is there another Michael Noble in Australia? He also wrote a page for the old OII Australia where he wasn't very nice toward the NZOA and OUR decision to change OUR name to NZSCA. That guy? Eventually, Michael Noble conceded that XXY and KS are not the same things. BTW, So it was a good thing I didn't bow to his superior intellect and shut the fuck up!

Candice Cody Well let's see, his brother is a famous explorer, more famous than him, and his brother took him to the South Pole, or Antarctica at least, to plant a flag on behalf of supposed "intersex" people, that had the initials XXY. It won't be hard to work out what his name is, if I can be bothered? I don't think he knows his name to know his exploits.

Candice Cody No I will not accept a pack of lies and bullshit as truth. Your friend Jukegh uploaded a video to TikTok that says she transitioned, and she could have and should have edited it if it was not true. She knows how to edit, she also knows how to delete, so why has she left a video online the contradicts her most recent posts?
